As the exclusive representative body and collective bargaining agent of Australia's elite professional footballers including the Socceroos, Matildas, A-league, W-League and Australians playing overseas, the PFA fights for 'world class' careers.

The PFA's research continues to demonstrate that the career path of an Australian professional footballer remains short-term, precarious and one of constant transition. It is for these reasons that Australian footballers must empower themselves with the football knowledge to make excellent career choices at every stage of their journey towards the elite echelon of the game.
